Mike opens the meeting at 9:37. He declares this as a special meeting, because the day after the day after tomorrow is Relay for Life. This is a 12-hour production, which we will be setting up for at 2:00pm. UPAC sound will already be set up when we get there, and we will be setting up in a tent with them. We will be setting up cameras far away to get wide shots, as well as close ups of the stage. The event ends at 6:00am, but the last major event for filming will end at 1:30am. We will get downtime then. Reilly asks if we can get some commentators, and Marc volunteers to be one. We will be streaming live on the Internet, as well as on campus cable channel 6. There will be different time blocks, so no one except for Kyle Mackenzie is expected to be there for the entire event. We will now schedule time for everyone on Mike's computer, and take a quick break.

If you would like to sign up for the Relay for life:

Put your name on the list!

Our meeting resumes with Dan: Tomorrow is Wednesday Night Live with "Cyclone 60". They are also performing downtown Troy at "Positively 4th st." on Thursday. So many side conversations begin that I decide to stop typing completely.

Scott on Operations: The club is operational.

Brian on station report: We will be broadcasting the Relay for Life live on campus cable, and if anyone is experienced in encoding live video and broadcasting it over the campus cable they could help. We could also use someone to test Channel 6 from somewhere on campus.

Our video switcher will not be repaired by the weekend. We will be using a temporary one.

Reilly says that the "Stick Lips" video on the website was very successful, and has had a lot of views. We got a finalized mix from WRPI this time, as opposed to the lower-quality mix that we usually have.

Jessica Mallow asks who will be interested in doing a prank show. Many people raise their hands. One idea is to put parking tickets on people's bicycles, or give out ridiculous tickets. Another idea is to set up a mimic architecture project that could collapse by pulling a string, and walk by it and pretend to break it. An organized musical is another idea. Kyle says that he does not support Haris singing. Dan says that someone needs to take on this project. Marc says that Jessica is an EMAC, so she has spare time and should be the project leader. She will be heading this project up.

Mike thanks Dan for getting some DVDs done, Kyle for doing some bitch work, and Reilly for getting editing done.

Everyone should come on Friday to see Kyle's great labeling job.
